

Abstract

The present invention is a interspinous process device which may be placed between adjacent spinous processes to limit the movement of the vertebrae. The device limits the range of motion of the spinous processes. The various embodiments include spacers which have a compressible medium that preferably provides progressive resistance.

5

BEST AVAILABLE COPY